

Transesophageal echocardiogram (TEE)

This test requires that the transducer be inserted down the throat into the esophagus (the swallowing tube that connects the mouth to the stomach.) Because the esophagus is located close to the heart, clear images of the heart structures can be obtained without the interference of the lungs and chest.